for the Little Girl's Death.

The Druggist Alleged to Have Prescribed in Several Fatal Cases.

Fortunato Fanciulii, a druggist at morning. Vincenzo Vizzo and his wife, the parents, blame Fortunato Fancuilli, the druggist, for the death of their child. According to their story, told to an "Evening World" reporter yesterday, little Lucia ran to her mother's arms from her playmates yesterday and complained that she was ill. Her mother thought nothing of that at the time, but very soon the little girl began to cry. It was apparent that she was really sick.

Then the child's mother wrapped her in a shawl and took her down to Fancuilli's drug store, where Dr. Frank W. Carmon has his office.

The mother said that Dr. Carmon, seconding to Fancuilli, was in the upper part of the city, and would not be back for some time. Fancuilli was in the upper part of the city, and would not be back for some time. Fancuilli examined the child's throat, the mother said, and gave her two prescriptions, Nos. 48,391 and 65,398, in battles bearing the label and again to provide the case of the persistent ones for places the force of the persistent ones for places the force of the persistent ones for places. REILLY GETS AN ORDER.

Still at War with Robie Over That Difference of $105.

Justice Fitzsimons, in the City Court, has granted to Pat Reilly, the Irish comedian, an order, returnable to-morrow, to show cause for a stay in the matter of the claim of Louis Robie against Reilly, involving a difference of $105.

This littigation is the result of a disagreement between Reilly and Robie, which began three years ago, when they were interested in the play "My Silent Partner," A judgment was eventually to the proposal of the chickens in the poultry houses, plucked all the big feathers from their bodies, and strewed the hoads off the chickens in the poultry houses, and strewed the hoads off the chickens in the poultry houses, purchase and teathers.
